

My name is Tracy Connolly and I have two children at Oxspring Primary School. I live in the local area and enjoy running and spending time with my family.

I have worked with children and families for nearly 20 years now. I qualified as a Social Worker ten years ago, initially working in a busy Local Authority children and families team before moving to my current role at the NSPCC in Sheffield. Here, I offer therapeutic support to children, young people and their families and deliver training to students and other professionals working with children and families.

I am extremely passionate about all children having a voice, experiencing equality and supporting emotional well-being in children and adults.

As a school governor I hope to be able to offer my time, experience and skills to make an active and positive contribution to the continuing development of Oxspring Primary School.
